India's low youth employment rate

ON THE JOB

Youngsiers in the age group of 15 to 24 years hold the greatest promise as the source for centomic growth of a nation. This is the age when people-graduate from calcuciton and step into the labour markets to chart a career or at least makea living. People usu-ally complete he labour markets to chart a career or at least makea living. People usu-ally complete heigh school (13) is standard) by 18 years of age, graduation by 21 years. The transition from education to employment begins at different peo-ple-during these years. In India, mosa people seem to make this transition after high school. Education may never end, but in the modern word, employment must begin scala norm in which education dicemines employment and employment dicemines em year status in society. Unemployment is at avestion discussion school discussions with a stores. In social strands in the standism and even mental stress. In India, unemoungsters in the age group of 15 to 24 years be a stigma, a source of social ostracisation, and even mental stress. In India, unem-ployment is still not recognised as a macro-coronnel problem. As a result, it is mostly seen as a personal failure and therefore a source of various forms of social isolation. The transition from education to emp-oment is entitical in the life cycle of a mod-em citizen. It carries andreads as much as em citizen, it carries anoeties as much as it carries hope. Just as the 15-24 stage is cru-claft to the individual, the youngsters in this age group are also crucial to an economy. An economy needs to be prepared to offer jobs to the fresh annual cohorts of hopeful youngsters who are in this transition phase.

ON THE JOB India's low youth employment rate

Youngsters in the age group of 15 to 24 years hold the greatest promise as the source for comming growth of a nation. This is the age when people graduate from education and step into the labour markets to chart a curcer or at Least make all living. People usu-ally complete high school (12th standard) ally complete high school (12th standard) by By sors of seg. praduation by 21 years and post-graduation by 23 or 24 years. The transition from education to employment begins at different stages for different poo-feduring these years. In India, most people scene to make this transition after high school. Education may never end, but in the modern workl, employment must begin somewhere between 15 and 24 years of age. This transition from a world of deduca-tion to a world of employment is a modern social norm in which education determines employment and employment determines social norm in which edication determines employment and employment determines our status in society. Unemployment can be atigma, asource of social asotracisatiun, and even mental stress. In India, unem-ployment is still not recognised as a macro-economic problem. As a result, it is mostly seen as a personal failure and therefore a source of various forms of social isolation. The transition form education to emp-loyment is ecitical in the life cycle of a mod-loweries how the at the 15 dot damber one.

ON THE JOB India's low youth employment rate

Youngsters in the ago group of 15 to 24 years hold the greatest promise as the source for cconomic growth of a nation. This is the age when people graduate from education and step into the labour markets to chart a career or at least make a living. People usu-ally complete high school (12th standard) by 18 years of age, graduation by 21 years and post-graduation by 23 or 24 years. The ind post-graduation by 23 or 24 years. The transition from education to employment begins at different stages for different peo-fed-uring these years. In India, most people seem to make this transition after high school. Education may never end, but in themodern workd, employment must begin somewhere between 13 and 24 years of age. This transition from a world of educa-tion to a world of employment is a modern social form in which education determines our status in society. Unemployment can be a stignat, a source of social stratistation and even mental stress. In India, unem-ployment is all in to teorgristed as a macro-economic problem. Just as the 15-24 stage is cru-clait to the individual, the youngsters in this age group are also crucial to an economy. An economy needs to be prepared to offer jobs to the fresh annual cohorts of hopeful youngsters who are in this transition phase.

12 while the average was 42.6 per cent, the LPR for the youth was much lower at 22.7 per cent. Yet, the youth face a much higher unemployment rate. While the overall unemployment rate aver-aged 7 per cent, the youth experi-enced an unemployment rate of over34 per cent. No worder then that the LPR voer 34 per cent. No wonder then that the LPR ment to the youth is falling faster than the fall in the overall LPR. Apparently, the high unemploy-ment rate dissuades them from joining the labour force. This is particularly true for women. India has the world's largest youth pop-ulation. This is the demographic dividend on offer. India also has among the lowest youth employment rates. There is no dearth of capital in the world today. Ideally, India true for women. should be grabbing this rare opportunity of easy availability of labour and capital to fuel rapid growth. However, it seems to be missing this bus.
